

Duties of Committee Chairs in General

ASR Committee Chairs have wide discretion in determining how much work their committees will actually undertake within a given year. Committee Chairs are appointed by the incoming President and serve for a year during his or her term. They may be reappointed as Chair, or not, at the discretion of the next President. Unless specifically provided in the by-laws (Nominations; Program), a Chair is not a voting member of the committee nor of Council unless that person is already a member of the committee or of Council at the time of appointment as Chair. (This is often the case, such as when someone is appointed to a three year committee term by the incoming President-Elect and is then elevated to Chair when the that President-Elect becomes President.) Per Robert's Rules the non-voting committee chair may break a tie.

Committees are required to report to Council at the annual meeting. This meeting of Council is held the night before the opening session of the annual meeting. Committee Chairs are responsible for submitting a written report to the Executive Officer by the middle of July so he or she can distribute it to the members of Council before the annual meeting. This report may be supplemented by an oral presentation at the annual meeting. The Association provides dinner on this occasion but no other reimbursement. Personal attendance by the Chair or a designee is not required but is appropriate if the committee is making recommendations that will require Council action.

Committee chairs are also expected to keep a file on the work of their committee during their tenure and to pass that file to their successors. In practice, some committees have been much better about this than others.

Committee Chairs receive no remuneration for their work. However, in cases where specific committee functions require the expenditure of funds (e.g., the mailing of manuscripts), a Chair may receive remuneration for this purpose from the Executive Officer, on presentation of receipts. Committee chairs who initiate work on their own, however, should not subsequently request reimbursement, unless they have previously cleared the specific expenditure with the Executive Officer.
